About the School of Law

The rule of law is the glue that binds together our social, economic, and political order. The legal system, as such, touches every aspect of our lives.

At their best, lawyers serve as advisors and advocates in managing their clients' business and personal affairs, minimizing complications and avoiding unintended consequences, facilitating desired transactions, and resolving conflicts and disputes that inevitably arise. At Texas A&M School of Law, our innovative J.D. program offers students a firm grounding in the substance of the law, even while emphasizing the increasing complex range of real-world skills that are necessarily for legal practice and effective leadership in the global community today.

Texas A&M's graduate law degrees – its M.Jur. and LL.M – offers students carefully designed and rigorous classroom and online educational experiences, experiential learning opportunities, research and writing skills, and a wide range of professional development and networking opportunities designed to prepare students for success in their chosen profession.

Texas A&M School of Law offers opportunities for dual J.D./M.B.A., J.D./M.P.H., and J.D./M.S.T. degrees. Additionally, undergraduate students at Texas A&M University may apply for the School of Law's early admission program (http://catalog.tamu.edu/graduate/undergraduate/general-information/degree-information/#requirementsforabaccalaureatedegreetext), under which qualifying students may begin the J.D. program after completing 75% of the credit hours required for their undergraduate degree. A student admitted into this program may apply up to 30 credit hours of J.D. coursework towards the requirements for completion of their undergraduate degree, with the approval of the participating undergraduate department or program.
