The Department of Educational Psychology offers a Bachelor of Science (B.S.) in University Studies with an area of concentration in Child Professional Services. This non-certification degree has a flexible 120-hour program of study, enabling students to pursue a body of coursework closely aligned with their professional interests. The degree includes a prescribed concentration and two minors: one in Sociology and another in either Creative Studies or Human Resource Development. The Child Professional Services concentration does not allow students to seek teacher certification. However, it provides a strong foundation in child and adolescent development, instructional methods, educational psychology, kinesiology, human resource development, and sociology as a means of preparing graduates for careers in civic, social, or religious organizations; hospitals or non-profit organizations; or family and community services. Students interested in University Studies - Child Professional Services should contact the EPSY undergraduate advisor located in Heaton Hall.
