DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATION

Overview

Communication is concerned with the most distinct human characteristics: the use of spoken language and the use of media to communicate information, maintain social contact, and influence others. The Department of Communication at Texas A&M University offers four undergraduate degrees, two minors, six certificates, a dedicated first semester experience for freshmen and transfer students, an internship program, and optional study abroad trips and field trips that when combined meet a student’s interests provide unique approaches to acquiring the knowledge and the marketable skills needed to describe, interpret, and transform the world around us through the use of communication and media.

We offer students the following:

Majors

- Communication BA — requires a minor
- Telecommunication Media Studies BA/BS — requires a minor
- University Studies - Journalism Studies BA — requires two minors

Minors

- Communication
- Journalism

Certificates

- Communication, Diversity and Social Justice
- Communication and Global Media
- Communication Leadership and Conflict Management
- Health Communication
- Social Media (majors only)
- Strategic Communication (majors only)

Many students select a major and a minor (two minors for Journalism Studies students) in order to customize their choices of classes. Other students choose a major, a minor and then pattern their courses to pursue a certificate. Honors students may participate in the the well-established and well-respected COMM-Honors program. Academic Advisors are on hand to assist students in refining their pathway to their future.

Career options abound. While some students choose advanced degrees in communication, law, business, or religion, many go straight into the work world to pursue careers in a vast array of areas. Typical choices include positions in strategic communication, public relations, advertising, promotions and sales, training and human resources, social media, journalism, digital communication, leadership and management, health fields related to communication, organizations and public policy, communication media, sports communication, entertainment and related areas of business, industry, government, and non-profit organizations. Students use their communication and media skills to become leaders in all areas of business, social and political life.
